Dear Parents of Room 2, I am so excited to share that the first few days of school have been fantastic. We have collaborated as a class on how we would like to proceed with our coffee shop on wheels, we have exchanged and expressed what we believe to be necessities as we enter this school year, and lastly each student has expressed the importance of being challenged throughout the year. I am very proud of all the students and their personal expectations for this school year!

~ The students were given an introduction crash course on Plato's new 3D printer! We were able to sit and collaborate with Mr. Chris and his class on what we would like to print as a group. We are planning on taking on our own version of ramps and pathways using our own ideas to develop courses for the marbles to travel on.

~ On Thursday, the students took a bit of their knowledge from their summer read, and created their own versions of the Lands Beyond just as Milo did with the tollbooth. (Please stop by and check out the students work outside our classroom!)

~Starting next week the students and I will be discussing "Phantom Tollbooth", their summer read, and dive into some literary devices that were used throughout the novel to make its play on words intriguing to its readers. We will also start our Math Scholastic Magazine as well as our Science World!

Hope you have a great weekend,
Ms. Alexandra
