Science: Losing your senses! This week the students were given the opportunity to realize the effects of losing your senses. One of the topics was Ear Hear, this was fun to watch the students try and keep their balance. The students learned how the ear functions and how it can affect our balance. They spinned 10 times and then attempted to walk in a straight line, this showed how the liquid in their ears continued to move in their ear which caused them to feel dizzy.

~Sister Senses was the second experiment, the students tried to trick their taste buds. They used different flavors of candy while holding their nose and closing their eyes. The students then had to try and guess the flavor of the candy for 30 seconds, then were able to let go of their nose and see if their guess was right!

Dear Martin: We have finished yet another classroom novel. This novel was definitely a classroom favorite and showed some of the true struggles that are occurring all over our nation right now. I am happy to say that all of the students did dive into this text knowing that the language would be rough and that the topic would be a difficult one to talk about. Overall, all of them took a very mature look into the life of Justyce and his friends.

~ We also were able to take this time and find other musicians who are trying to take a stand using their music. The students were able to choose a artist of their choice who has written songs expressing change and the need for more peace between all people.

Law Day: As of today we are officially done with our law day essays for 2019! I am very proud of all of your students essays this year. We will be hearing back from the Hellenic Bar in April for the winners.

Hope everyone has a great break!

See you on April 1, 2019
